From the land of Salvo, we bring you the first issue of “From the Nook”. Keeping a finger on the busy pulse that is Salvo, or something like that. There is no better way to kick this off than to begin tracking the whereabouts of one Mick Harris, gone for lo these many months of 2016.

Word on the street is that Mick has begun the trek east, although GPS tracking has proved pointless thus far. We have enlisted the help of NORAD. If they can track Santa around the world for one day a year, perhaps they will take on the task of stalking Mick from his point of origin somewhere in the wild of Canada, taking a route east that can best be described as “meandering”. The report from NORAD is listed as follows: “We have been watching for several days now, and all we can surmise is that if Mr. Harris were delivering presents on Christmas Eve, the children of the world would be, forgive our terminology, screwed for toys beyond all comprehension.” From there NORAD told me to stop calling them or I would be put on the naughty list.

Norad tracking Mick in April, 2016, somewhere in the wilderness of Wyoming. Director Stan Gonzalez stating that the search was futile. Stan also hates Christmas.

So where is Mick and when will be back home in Salvo?

“ The children of the world would be screwed for toys beyond all comprehension.”

This is the subject of much debate at the post office and even the Blue Whale, which has yet to open but folks like to gather there just to argue on this topic. Rumor has it the multitude of motorcycles that seem to be cruising back and forth aimlessly on Route 12 are really searching for Mick. Keep combing the streets biker friends, we appreciate your support, but not as much as we appreciate ear plugs this week.

The predictions on return dates have been many and spirited. Some say the end of April, many are saying in May, a few doubters place him back in the summer months, and I did hear a few frustrated folks mentioning 2019. To the growing list of “From the Nook” readers, I pose this challenging question to all of you.

Dare I say let’s bet on it? Give me your date, any date from April 25th, 2016 to October 23rd, 2034. On which day will Mick return to the hallowed street of Park, to the promised land of Mouse’s house? Send your choice to my cell phone at 252-256-1897 and the closest one to when Mick pulls into the driveway wins the bet. So, what to wager? A thousand dollars apiece? Real Estate? Livestock? Let us make it simple and the one who wins will get their beverage of choice, to be shared at a gathering when Mick doth return. All I can say is I hope you are not too thirsty, as you may have to wait awhile.

In the next issue of “In the Nook”, we celebrate the opening of the Blue Whale, no doubt some fine May Outer Banks weather, will we ever get to burn up the Contestable family Christmas tree, and will Mick ever make it out of the Rockies? See you then.
